ENTIRE ENSEMBLE

The inspiration for the ballet is the music—Bohuslav Martinu's Toccata e Due Canzoni. It is a compelling piece for dance and the choreographer was intrigued by its many voices.

The score is infused with contrasting color and rhythms which energize and fill it with motion. The style of the ballet is built on the fragile relationship of one couple which is reflected in the stirring of the ensemble as a whole.

The creation of this ballet was made possible by a generous gift from Mrs. Samuel P. Peabody and a grant from The Rockefeller Foundation.

Firebird was first produced by Diaghilev's Ballets Russes at the Paris Opera in June, 1910, with choreography by Michel Fokine, the great early twentieth-century Russian choreographer. The cast was headed by Tamara Karsavina, the choreographer and his wife, Vera. Using legends of oriental Russia, Fokine sought to create a ballet of national origin. Since a complete Firebird story suitable in its entirety for a ballet did not exist, he combined various folktales for his scenario. Stravinsky, then young and relatively unknown, was chosen to compose the music.

Using Stravinsky's revised and shortened 1945 score, Mr. Taras and Geoffrey Holder have moved the ballet out of the mythical forests of old Russia and reset it in an imaginary tropical jungle. The production was premiered by Dance Theatre of Harlem on January 12, 1982, at New York's City Center, featuring in the cast Stephanie Dabney in the title role, plus Donald Williams, Lorraine Graves and Sulpicio Mariano. PBS-TV's 1982 documentary on the making of this production received a Silver Award from the Information Film Producers of America.

SYNOPSIS

In a dense and mysterious forest a young man is hunting. He hears strange and ominous sounds and then sees a fiery light which sweeps the air and suddenly turns into the glittering image of the Firebird. So as not to frighten her away, he runs to hide as the shining creature leaps onto the scene. The Young Man returns and, fascinated with this shimmering creature, part magical bird and part beautiful woman, attempts to capture her. Terrified, she alternates between frozen immobility and wild flutterings of escape. She pleads for her freedom and the Young Man releases her. In gratitude she dances for him and with him. Before she leaves, she takes a feather from her breast, indicates that it is a magical feather that will protect him from danger, and then leaps high into the air and disappears from view.

In the gardens of the Prince of Evil, the Young Man comes upon a group of Beautiful Maidens, led by the Princess of Unreal Beauty. He watches their simple and joyous dances for a moment and then steps forth from hiding. The Beautiful Maidens are alarmed, particularly so when the Young Man tries to meet the Princess of Unreal Beauty. But the Princess of Unreal Beauty steps forward and they begin to dance.

Suddenly darkness settles over the scene and with a crash of music, Creatures of Evil appear and attack. The Young Man starts to flee but remembers that the magic feather will protect him. He stands his ground against the Creatures of Evil and the wicked Prince of Evil who has joined them.

There is a flash and the Firebird appears. With incredible swiftness she circles the stage leaving a wake of fire. The Firebird destroys the Prince of Evil and the Forest darkens. In a final, softly shining lullaby, she brings peace to the forest and then flutters out of view.

In the final scene, courtiers, attendants and bearers of pennants celebrate the wedding of the Young Man and the Princess of Unreal Beauty.

"Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe." —John 4:48

"Why, who makes much of a miracle?
As to me I know of nothing else but miracles.
Whether I walk the streets of Manhattan...
Or look at strangers opposite me riding the car
Or watch honey-bees busy around the hive of a summer forenoon,
Or animals feeding in the fields
Or birds, or the wonderfulness of insects in the air,
Or the wonderfulness of the sundown, or of stars shining so quiet and bright
Or the exquisite delicate thin curve of the new moon in spring...

To me every hour of the light and dark is a miracle,
Every cubic inch of space is a miracle,
Every square yard of the surface of the earth is spread with the same,
Every foot of the interior swarms with the same...
What stranger miracles are there?" —Walt Whitman

This ballet draws its inspiration from the Native American of today, as seen in the context of his historical and cultural background.

A series of vignettes trace the life of one Native American, from birth to death, which also reflects the life and situations of many Native Americans.

Costumes executed by Sandra Woodall, Patricia Polen, and Ray Diffen Studios, New York.

Buffalos made by San Francisco Opera Scenic Shop under the direction of Barry Ellery.

Scenery, props and costumes courtesy of San Francisco Ballet.

The original production of this ballet was supported by generous grants from Shakloe Corporation and the National Endowment for the Arts in Washington, D.C., a federal agency.

This production has been staged with the support of Ann Stephens in memory of Nancy Fox.

"Voluntaries" by musical definition are free-ranging organ or trumpet improvisations that are often played before, during, or after a religious service. The Latin root of the word also connotes desire or flight, and the ballet is conceived as linked series of voluntaries.

This ballet draws its inspiration from the Native American of today, as seen in the context of his historical and cultural background.

A series of vignettes trace the life of one Native American, from birth to death, which also reflects the life and situations of many Native Americans.

Costumes executed by Sandra Woodall, Patricia Polen, and Ray Diffen Studios, New York.

Buffalos made by San Francisco Opera Scenic Shop under the direction of Barry Ellery.

Scenery, props and costumes courtesy of San Francisco Ballet.

The original production of this ballet was supported by generous grants from Shakloe Corporation and the National Endowment for the Arts in Washington, D.C., a federal agency.

This production has been staged with the support of Ann Stephens in memory of Nancy Fox.

Music by arrangement with Notevole Music Publishing, Inc.—an Integrated Arts People company—publisher and copyright owner.

Fathers and Sons

by Robert Greskovic

The Father in George Balanchine's ballet The Prodigal Son appears as both a commanding and a forgiving figure. He enters as a venerable parent eager to bless his children with his wisdom. Youth being what it is, particularly young men in the case of this Biblical re-telling, the Father's Son thinks he knows better and flies his coop. In the ballet's ending, the Father reappears, more stately and still, as his broken and humbled Son climbs into his waiting embrace.

In the years when Balanchine presented this 1929 Paris-born work with his New York City Ballet in America, he would, from time to time, perform the role of the Father himself. It was during this era, the 1950s, that Arthur Mitchell was one of Balanchine's artistic sons at N.Y.C.B. Though he was never cast in the title role of the Prodigal Son—as the company's lone black dancer such dramatic casting would likely have provoked readings of the ballet well beyond the intentions of its scenario—Mitchell could see that by assuming the part of Father, Balanchine was performing on rare occasions in public a role he played in private every day. Ballet artistic directors wear many hats and that of wise parent may crown them all.

As Dance Theatre of Harlem moves on from the silver anniversary it celebrated last year, Mitchell has acquired The Prodigal Son for the company he founded upon leaving Balanchine's organization. Even if Mitchell, who like Balanchine went from a career as dancer to one of ballet master and artistic director, does not choose to perform the part of the Father in his staging of Balanchine's ballet, he will remain in his watchful, parental role behind the scenes. Delineating the "care and feeding" process of guiding a ballet troupe, Balanchine sometimes likened his job to that of a chef cooking up various dishes, to sustain his dancers and as a result satisfy their audiences.

The Prodigal Son qualifies as the season's new old-masterwork. Additionally, Mitchell has commissioned two brand new works to "feed" his dancers and to amplify Dance Theatre's bill of fare. One, Signs and Wonders by the West Coast's Alonzo King, will set DTH classicists in motion to a compilation of traditional African music, a strong selection of which comes from various Pygmy peoples. King, whose work has consistently shown a taste for intense-heat body language, here stresses inspiration from "classical ballet positions" and "classical African sculpture."

The season's other new work comes directly from within Mitchell's DTH family. Ever watchful of their prodigal children, ballet's artistic directors continually look in hope for some prodigious son or daughter. History has shown that the appearance of such impressive individuals has come in stronger numbers with regard to dancers than in the case of dancemakers. So far, Mitchell has had his good share of prodigious performers, even as it remains evident in certain cases that these compelling dancers demonstrate how the prodigious and the prodigal are not always mutually exclusive.

Now, with The Joplin Dances, by DTH dancer Robert Garland, Mitchell proposes a dancing son as a choreographic talent. Garland, who has shown no signs of prodigality over his steady tenure with the company—no departures for the supposedly greener pastures of Broadway or more big-budget ballet companies here or abroad—has played the loyal son at DTH, performing a variety of classical and character roles with easy dignity. A taste of his choreographic voice and cause for Mitchell's faith in him as a dancemaker came in a sassy pièce d'occasion Garland created for DTH women in a high-profile AIDS benefit performance in 1993.

His current choreographic venture has the unmistakable ambition of budding artist written all over it. Set to the music of Scott Joplin and Joseph Lamb, a Joplin protégé, Garland's ballet includes two scenes, each interweaving the turn-of-the-century world of Joplin and his Deep South "rags" and "cakewalks" with the particulars of late-20th century classical ballet. The Joplin Dances is set in the Maple Leaf Club, Sedalia, Missouri around 1899 and its particulars include a cakewalk called "Jumpin' de Broom" and a sitting-down number called "Book Dance."

Of the three ballets returning to DTH repertory after a hiatus, the one seen least recently is Designs With Strings, a tender vignette created by John Taras in 1948 to a lush Tchaikovsky trio. Taras, originally a member of Balanchine's artistic family, has become something of an adoptive parent at DTH. His original choreography for The Firebird, a DTH signature work also included during the season, continues to showcase some of Mitchell's "favorite" daughters as its flying, flamelike ballerina. Taras's longstanding knowledge of the inner workings of The Prodigal Son, a work he continues to stage for companies around the world, will no doubt fortify DTH's version with wisdom once received directly from Balanchine.

All this emphasis on Mitchell and the sons of his artistic family does not mean to neglect daughters. DTH has continually had its share of prodigious and prodigal women. This repertory will continue to showcase the formidable ones who remain in the family as well as any number of newcomers Mitchell has developed since the company was in town last. There are three women's parts in The Prodigal Son, two stay-at-home sisters to their wayward brother and one icy cold temptress whose glacial beauty and physical prowess overwhelm the cocky youth. Since the very beginnings of Dance Theatre of Harlem—its school in 1968, its company in 1969—Mitchell has shown an understanding of what it takes to inspire the women in his care. A few have sometimes proven as prodigal as the son in the Biblical tale addressed here, but more have been as prodigious as any ballerina needed to perform the role of the Siren, the woman central to the climax of Balanchine's ballet.

ARTHUR MITCHELL is known around the world as an accomplished artistic director, teacher, choreographer, and dancer. He has been a pivotal figure in the dance world for over four decades. Mr. Mitchell began his dance training at New York City's High School of Performing Arts, where he was the first male student to win the coveted annual dance award. Upon graduation he was offered two scholarships: one to Bennington College, and one to the School of American Ballet. He accepted the latter. Mr. Mitchell made history as the first African-American male dancer to become a permanent member of a major ballet company when he joined the New York City Ballet in 1955, debuting in the Fourth Movement of Western Symphony.

He quickly rose to the position of principal dancer. During his 15 years with New York City Ballet, he electrified audiences with his performances in ballets in a broad spectrum of the NYCB repertoire. Mr. Mitchell was at home in the neoclassical style of the Agon Pas de Deux, as well as in the lighthearted role of Puck in A Midsummer Night's Dream, two roles choreographed especially for him by the late George Balanchine. His performing career includes nightclub appearances, Broadway, film, and television. He was a popular guest artist in the United States and abroad.

Upon learning of the death of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in 1968, Mr. Mitchell determined to do something to provide children in Harlem with the kinds of opportunities which he felt had been given to him. That same summer he began giving classes in a remodeled garage. In 1969, with financial assistance from the Ford Foundation, Mitchell and Karel Shook, his teacher and mentor, founded and saw the formal incorporation of Dance Theatre of Harlem both as a school of the allied arts and as a professional dance company. Having long since expanded its boundaries, Dance Theatre of Harlem has grown into a multicultural institution, comprised of students and dancers from the United States and around the world.

Among the many recognitions earned by Mr. Mitchell in 1994 are the coveted MacArthur Foundation Fellowship, the Barnard Medal of Distinction from Columbia University and the 1994 Award for Distinguished Service to the Arts from the American Academy of Arts and Letters. In 1993, Mr. Mitchell became the youngest recipient of The Kennedy Center Honor, celebrating "an extraordinary lifetime of contributions to American culture through the performing arts." That same year, Mayor David Dinkins presented Mr. Mitchell with the Handel Medallion, New York City's most prestigious award for artistic contribution. He is a member of the Council of the National Endowment for the Arts; an appointee, by President Bill Clinton, to the President's Commission on White House Fellowships; Honorary Patron to the Market Theatre Foundation in South Africa; former council member of the New York State Council on the Arts; former member of the New York City Cultural Affairs Advisory Commission; and member of the first U.S.I.C.A. Dance Cultural Study Team to the People's Republic of China in 1980.

He is the recipient of: Actor's Equity Paul Robeson Award; New York Public Library's "Lion of the Performing Arts" Award; the Arts and Business Council's Arnold Gingrich Memorial Award; the American Academy of Achievement's Golden Plate Award; The Black History Makers Award; Harkness Distinguished Artist in Dance; and North Carolina School of the Arts Lucia Chase Award. He was inducted into the NAACP's Image Awards of Fame and witnessed the induction of Dance Theatre of Harlem into the Museum of the Kirov Ballet in 1988. Mr. Mitchell has received 14 Honorary Doctorate Degrees from institutions nationwide, including Harvard University, Princeton University, The Juilliard School, Williams College, North Carolina School of the Arts, City College of the City University of New York, and Barnard College.

DANCE THEATRE OF HARLEM was founded in 1968 by Arthur Mitchell, as his personal commitment to the people of Harlem following the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. 26 years later, Dance Theatre of Harlem is widely acclaimed as a premier dance institution with a solid commitment to enrich the lives of young people and adults around the world through dance.

Building upon its original mission—at once social, educational and artistic—to provide children and adults everywhere with the opportunity to learn and experience the discipline of dance and the joy of the performing arts, Dance Theatre of Harlem continues to work to bridge the gaps of cultural and economic disparity and stereotypes. This is accomplished not only through performances, but also through the School of Dance Theatre of Harlem and a wide range of educational and community outreach activities presented in DTH's Dancing through Barriers programs.

Beginning as "one of ballet's most exciting undertakings" (The New York Times, 1971), Dance Theatre of Harlem has grown into a world-renowned neoclassical company of 36 dancers with a diverse repertoire of over 75 works. DTH's annual seasons, both domestic and international, have set box-office and attendance records. Among the highlights of DTH's early international acclaim are command performances for European royalty and historic engagements at London's Royal Opera House at Covent Garden. In 1988, Dance Theatre of Harlem was the first American ballet company to perform in the former Soviet Union as part of the US/USSR Cultural Exchange Initiative. This landmark five-week tour sold out in Moscow, Tbilisi and Leningrad, where the company received a rare standing ovation at the Kirov Theatre. In 1990, Dance Theatre of Harlem made its first appearance on the African continent, performing at the National Cultural Center in Cairo, Egypt. In 1992, Dance Theatre of Harlem returned to the continent for an unprecedented tour in South Africa. Performing to critical praise and integrated sold out houses, DTH's visit emphasized the community outreach and educational programs for which it has become known.

Dance Theatre of Harlem's television credits include European and American airings of A Streetcar Named Desire, and an NBC special featuring Giselle, with Bill Cosby as host. In July of 1991, Dance Theatre of Harlem was featured in an ABC documentary entitled, "Peter Jennings Reporting: From the Heart of Harlem." The Company was also showcased in a "60 Minutes" segment that has been aired several times since its filming in 1986. In 1993, DTH received a cable Ace Award for the airing of Fall River Legend, which was voted best performing arts special.

In 1992, Dance Theatre of Harlem embarked on an $18 million Capital Campaign to create an endowment fund and to renovate and expand its existing space in Harlem. These new facilities officially opened in October, 1994, and include four dance studios and increased classroom space to accommodate both the Company and the School of Dance Theatre of Harlem. Over 1300 students from all over the world come to DTH to study ballet, jazz, tap, ethnic dance, dance history and music theory. Dance Theatre of Harlem also brings its educational programs to communities and schools throughout the country with Dancing through Barriers, and has established long-term residencies with the Music Hall Center in Detroit, Michigan and The John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, DC.

Today, 26 years after its founding, Dance Theatre of Harlem continues to manifest the pride and passion that originally inspired Arthur Mitchell to create a ballet school in Harlem. What began as one man's commitment to change has become a vital component of the world's cultural landscape.

DAVID LAMARCHE (Music Director) began his association with DTH in 1983 and has served as Company Pianist, Conductor, and for the past three years, as Music Director. He has conducted over 40 pieces in the company's repertoire, including the premieres of Flower Festival, A Song for Dead Warriors and Etosha. Mr. LaMarche has performed with DTH on foreign and domestic tours, including historic engagements in the former Soviet Union, Egypt and South Africa, where he played, conducted, led workshops and taught master classes. Over the years, Mr. LaMarche has collaborated with performers as diverse as Jessye Norman, Ben Vereen, Gregory Hines, Leon Bibb and Odetta. In addition to his position with DTH, Mr. LaMarche has been a guest conductor with The Joffrey Ballet and is a frequent collaborator in chamber music performances and vocal recitals in and around New York City. His essay, "Conducting for Ballet," will be published this year in Dance Ink. Mr. LaMarche is a graduate of Boston University. He studied piano with Marta Bracchi-LeRoux and conducting with Milton Rosenstock and Gary Fagin.
